The USPTO's "indefinite" rejection apparently is not formally being appealed, according to the above. The USPTO will delay the publication of the patent application, however, until the dispute is fully resolved. In 1980, the court ruled that the USPTO's rejection of the patent application was "indefinite" and that the patent should be granted. The application will be placed in publication 6 months from the date of the court's decision. The court's decision is "final" and "binding" on the USPTO.
